

Maternity Service Transfers and Diversions in British Columbia

Overview

British Columbia's maternity care system is designed to ensure parents and babies receive safe, appropriate care based on clinical needs. From time to time, maternity patients may be directed or transferred to a different hospital. These decisions are part of established, province-wide processes focused on patient safety, quality of care, and timely access to the right services. Transfers and diversions are not unique to maternity care and are a standard practice in modern health systems.

Why Transfers Occur

While staffing is one factor that can influence care delivery, maternity patients may be transferred for a range of clinical and safety-related reasons, including:

- Level of care required: Some hospitals provide low-risk maternity services, while others are equipped for higher-risk pregnancies or births.
- Need for surgical or anesthesia services: Not all sites can support emergency or complex Cesarean sections at all times.
- Neonatal care needs: Some babies require access to specialized newborn or neonatal intensive care services.
- Changes in clinical condition: Pregnancy and labour can evolve quickly, requiring escalation to specialized care.
- Diagnostic or treatment limitations: Temporary limitations in imaging, laboratory services, or blood product availability.
- Capacity and system flow: Managing multiple high-acuity cases at once may require redistributing patients to maintain safety.

How Decisions Are Made; Transfers and diversion decisions are:

- Clinically driven, based on established criteria and real-time assessment.
- Made by healthcare professionals, including hospital teams, physicians and BC Emergency Health Services (BCEHS).

- Patient-specific, reflecting the needs of the parent and baby at that moment.
- Coordinated across the system, with communication between paramedics, receiving hospitals, and care teams.

What a Diversion Means

- Diversion: When a hospital goes on full-service diversion, BCEHS transfers patients to an appropriate primary and secondary accepting sites. Any self-arrivals will be triaged and transferred or directed to another site.
- Partial Diversion: Clinical teams and BCEHS evaluate/triage patients and possibly divert based on medical needs and/or described scenario (e.g. the site currently is unable to support C-sections, high risk pregnancies).
- Site Operations Alert: A notice that sites are experiencing high patient volumes, are supporting a high acuity patient or a site operational issue. Patients arrive and BC EHS transfers patient to site as normal. Clinical Teams evaluate the patient and then may decide whether to accept the patient or transfer elsewhere based on patient need and resource availability.
- Unknown: Not enough information provided

Different levels of diversion (full diversion, partial diversion, or site operations alerts) allow operations the flexibility to ensure higher-risk patients can access specialized services while appropriate care continues elsewhere.

- The Health System directs patients to a hospital best equipped to meet their needs
- Patients who arrive at a site are assessed and triaged by qualified clinicians
- Patient transfers are conducted with medical oversight and planning to ensure safety and continuity of care

Key Takeaway for the Public

Maternity service transfers are part of normal, safety-focused healthcare operations. These decisions are not taken lightly and are used only when clinically appropriate. They reflect careful clinical judgment, not the withdrawal of care, and are used to ensure every patient receives appropriate, high-quality maternity and newborn services.

Draft Classification	Preliminary Definition
Diversion	BC EHS transfers patients to Primary and Secondary Accepting sites. Any self-arrivals will be triaged and transferred or directed to another site.
Partial Diversion	BC EHS evaluates/triages patient and possibly diverts based on medical needs and/or described scenario (e.g. C-sections, high risk pregnancies).
Site Operations Alert	BC EHS transfers patient to site as normal. Site evaluates the patient and then may decide whether to accept the patient or transfer elsewhere based on patient need and resource availability.
